TRUMP SAYS HE DID NOT KNOW OF PORN STAR MONEY

1 President Donald Trump, in his first public remarks about an intimate relationship he has been accused of having with an adult film star, said on Thursday he did not know about a $130,000 payment made by his lawyer to actress Stormy Daniels to keep her quiet. The White House has denied that Trump had sex with Daniels, whose real name is Stephanie Clifford. Daniels has said she and Trump had sex once in 2006. Asked why his lawyer, Michael Cohen, paid the money if the allegations were untrue, Trump told reporters on Air Force One, "You'll have to ask Michael Cohen. Michael's my attorney." Asked if he knew about the payment to Daniels, Trump said, "No." Asked if he knew where the money came from to pay Daniels, Trump told reporters, "No, I don't know." Cohen has said he paid Daniels out of his own pocket. Last month, Daniels sued Cohen to be released from the non-disclosure agreement she signed in October 2016 in exchange for the $130,000 payment from him. Daniels' attorney, Michael Avenatti, said Trump's admission that he did not know about the agreement bolstered his client's case to be released from the deal.

NYC TO LISTEN TO MUSLIM GROUPS ON SURVEILLANCE

2 New York City has pledged to listen to suggestions by Muslim groups when it drafts new policies for investigating political activity, part of a settlement over police surveillance. The agreement, announced on Thursday after two years of talks, also requires the NYPD to send officials to meet with members of the New Jersey-based Muslim groups that brought the suit against the city. As part of the 11-page settlement, the NYPD pledged that it would not conduct investigations motivated by race, religion or ethnicity. "The resolution of this case affirms and enhances the NYPD's commitment to conducting effective investigations to prevent crime and terrorism," Police Commissioner James O'Neill said in a statement. The Muslim groups filed suit in U.S. District Court nearly six years ago, demanding that the city police stop surveillance of mosques, businesses, college campuses and other gathering spots as part of its anti-terrorism campaign. Farhaj Hassan, the lead plaintiff in the suit, said in a statement that the settlement was "part of a broader effort to hold this country to account for its stated commitment and its obligation to uphold religious liberty and equality."

NYPD INVESTIGATES CONOR MCGREGOR AFTER BRAWL

4 New York police are investigating an incident in which UFC lightweight champion Conor McGregor allegedly caused chaos at Brooklyn's Barclays Center on Thursday by gatecrashing a media event ahead of UFC 223 on Saturday. McGregor is alleged to have entered the building through a side entrance with his entourage before trying to attack a van containing Russian lightweight contender Khabib Nurmagomedov and other fighters as they prepared to leave. New York Police Department spokesperson Tarik Sheppard said they were "looking into the incident" but that as of yet no arrests or warrants had been issued. Video footage circulated on social media showed McGregor running in a loading area and picking up a trash can. Clips shot from inside the van showed an object hitting and cracking the vehicle's windshield before the driver reversed away. "This is the most disgusting thing that has ever happened in the history of the company," UFC president Dana White told website MMA Junkie. Nurmagomedov is due to face Max Holloway in a showdown for McGregor's belt, which he won in 2016 but never defended.

TRUMP PLANS $100 BILLION IN NEW TARIFFS ON CHINA

5 President Donald Trump said on Thursday he had instructed U.S. trade officials to consider $100 billion in additional tariffs on China, fueling an already heated trade dispute between the world's two biggest economies. Trump said in a statement the further tariffs were being considered "in light of China's unfair retaliation" against earlier U.S. trade actions that included $50 billion of tariffs on Chinese goods. He added that the U.S. Trade Representative had determined that China "has repeatedly engaged in practices to unfairly obtain America's intellectual property." U.S. stock index futures fell in reaction to Trump's latest statement. Financial markets have swung wildly in response to fears of escalating trade tensions between Washington and Beijing. "Rather than remedy its misconduct, China has chosen to harm our farmers and manufacturers," Trump said. The tariffs are aimed at forcing changes to Chinese government policies aimed at transferring U.S. intellectual property to Chinese companies. The tariffs have stirred fears that the countries will spiral into a trade war that will crush global growth.

Pipe-wielding man fatally shot by NYPD officers in Brooklyn

The 34-year-old had previously been classified by officers as mentally ill and was brandishing a metal pipe with a cylindrical knob on the top.

NYPD officers fatally shot a black man after they believed he was pointing a gun at them in Brooklyn Wednesday afternoon, officials said. The man, who police had classified as mentally ill after previous encounters with him, was instead wielding a metal pipe with a knob.

Five officers were responding to three 911 calls about a suspect making threats with a silver gun around 4:45 p.m. near Montgomery Street and Utica Avenue in Crown Heights, Chief Terence A. Monahan said at a press conference.

"The suspect then took a two-handed shooting stance and pointed an object at the approaching officers," Monahan said.

Four officers, including three in plainclothes, fired 10 bullets, striking the man, who was later identified by his father, Eric Vassell, as 34-year-old Saheed Vassell. Vassell was pronounced dead at Kings County Medical Center. Police on Thursday released surveillance video and transcripts of 911 calls placed by alarmed citizens.

Surveillance video shows a black man approaching people and pointing an object at them. In one instance, the man appears to point the object at a woman and a small child. Police also released a photo of the object, which appeared to be a metal pipe that had a tube-shaped knob at the top.

"There is a guy in a brown jacket walking around pointing... I don't know, (to someone else) what is he pointing in people's faces? They say it's a gun, it's silver," said one 911 caller.

Another caller said, "There's a guy walking around the street. He looks like he's crazy but he's pointing something at people that looks like a gun and he's like popping it as if... he's pulling the trigger."

Eric, Vassell's father, told the New York Times that his son was bipolar and had been in hospitals several times over the past few years, including after times when he had encounters with NYPD officers.

Residents told the Times that Vassell, who has a 15-year-old son, was known around the neighborhood for doing odd jobs for local businesses and panhandling in a nearby subway station.

Crown Heights rally held for Saheed Vassell

Following the death of Saheed Vassell, a Brooklyn man who was shot and killed Wednesday night by police who mistakenly thought he had a gun, activists held rallies calling for justice.

"Saheed Vassell, an unarmed black man, was murdered by NYPD Wednesday," the event page for the rally stated. "Join us as we demand justice for Saheed Vassell. Black Lives Matter!"

"Justice For #Saheed-Vassell" began at 6 p.m. Thursday on the corner of Montgomery Street and Utica Avenue, where Vassell was fatally shot. NYC Shut It Down, an activist organization in solidarity with Black Lives Matter, organized the rally along with community groups Equality for Flatbush, Peoples Power Assemblies, Why Accountability and Workers World Party.

Also at 6 p.m., the Brooklyn Movement Center, Black Alliance for Just Immigration, families of people killed by police and other New Yorkers gathered at the same spot and then marched to the 71st Precinct at 421 Empire Blvd.

NY AG investigating NYPD's fatal shooting of Saheed Vassell

A surveillance image captured of Saheed Vassell making a "two-hand shooting stance," police said. NYPD

Schneiderman's office and Mayor Bill de Blasio confirmed probe into Wednesday's killing of unarmed man in Crown Heights.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman's office is investigating the death of Saheed Vassell, a Brooklyn man who was shot and killed Wednesday night by police who mistakenly thought he was wielding a gun.

Amy Spitalnick, press secretary for the AG's office, confirmed in a statement that "the Attorney General's Special Investigations and Prosecutions Unit has opened an investigation into the death of Saheed Vassell."

This investigation is within the AG's authority under Executive Order No. 147, Spitalnick noted, which gives Schneiderman the ability to oversee investigations of incidents in which unarmed civilians die during interactions with police, or when there is "significant question" of whether or not that civilian was armed and dangerous.

NYPD officers fired 10 bullets at Vassell, believing he was holding a gun when he was holding a metal pipe with a knob on the end.

"We're committed to conducting an independent, comprehensive, and fair investigation," Spitalnick said.

Mayor Bill de Blasio confirmed the AG's office is investigating Vassell's death at an unrelated news conference Thursday morning.

"This is a very painful situation, what happened in Crown Heights yesterday. It is a tragedy by any measure," de Blasio said. "There's a full investigation going on. I've also been informed the attorney general is going to initiate an investigation. We will work fully and cooperatively with him."

The mayor mentioned Vassell's reported mental health condition — his father told the New York Times that he was bipolar — and said that aspect itself is one piece of the tragedy. He urged people to reach out to 888-NYC-WELL if they have friends or family members suffering from mental illness.

"If you have a family member with a serious mental health condition, it's painful, it's challenging, it's frustrating, it's confusing," de Blasio said. "I want to ask people to try to break through those feelings and pick up the phone, because when you call that number you get a trained counselor who can literally tell you step by step what you can do to get that person help."

Cynthia Nixon, who recently announced her candidacy for governor of New York, also commented on the fatal shooting on Twitter.

"Yesterday, Saheed Vassell was shot and killed by police in Brooklyn," she said. "When we say we're going to address gun violence that must also include the shootings of unarmed black men and women by the police. #BlackLivesMatter."

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Did you know NYC is home to countless pet-friendly hotels?

We showcase one of the many spots across the city that welcomes furry jet-setters — and gives them amenities that'll make their humans jealous.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

Being that New York is the largest city in the country, it may not be at the top — or even on — the "to visit" list of those who love traveling with their pets, but our concrete jungle is actually home to a surprisingly large number of pet-friendly hotels.

And if you're thinking "pet-friendly" translates to "fleabag," you'll be pleasantly surprised to know that many luxury boutique hotels in New York welcome both human and four-legged guests.

One such property is the AAA Four Diamond Executive Hotel Le Soleil New Yorkon West 36th Street, which recently began welcoming furry jetsetters through its Furry Comforts program.

"The whole idea was to create a little bit of a getaway for travelers and their four-legged friends, whether for a quick weekend or a staycation," said General Manager Paul Ridguard.

The Executive Hotel Le Soleil provides gourmet treats, plush pet beds, bowls, toys, lavender-scented poop bags and dog-walking services can be arranged should parents want a night on the town sans the fur-kid.

The concierge can also provide a list of nearby pet-friendly restaurants, parks, pet boutiques and groomers, including The Pet Maven, whose staff comes to the hotel.

Like most pet-friendly hotels, Le Soleil has a weight limit (40 pounds), a two-pet maximum and a surcharge ($150), which covers a post-checkout deep clean as the hotel does not designate any of its 161 rooms, 96 of which are suites, or floors as pet-only.

"The idea behind that is people book all kinds of rooms and because you have pets, you don't necessarily want to be relegated to a certain floor or room," Ridguard explained.

While Executive Hotel Le Soleil sees about one or two pet guests a week, "we'd love to see more coming into the hotel to create a more paws-itive experience," Ridguard added.

For a first-hand take from a pet's point-of-view, let's turn the story over to Kona, this reporter's rescue pit bull, who recently enjoyed an overnight "Konacation" at the hotel.

A (very) short list of other pet-friendly hotels in NYC

- Sutton Court Hotel Residences
- NYLO New York City
- Westin New York at Times Square
- Eventi Hotel
- Stewart Hotel
- Affinia Gardens
- The Empire Hotel
- Hotel Pennsylvania
- Ink48 Hotel
- The Benjamin
- Sofitel New York

Kona's favorite three things about staying at Executive Hotel Le Soleil

TREATS! The first thing I noticed upon entering our 17th-floor suite were three delicious bone-shaped welcome treats made of pumpkin, barley and peanut butter that were just for me, which is good because I don't like to share — even though I almost had to with Mom and Dad because they looked so good!

CREATURE COMFORTS Our room not only had a big for-humans bed and sofa, but there was also a soft bed just for me that my parents moved over by the floor-to-ceiling windows so I could keep my eye on my city, which brings me to...

THE VIEW My fur-vorite part of my stay at the Executive Hotel Le Soleil, aside from my treats and getting a taste of the delicious room service burgers, was our view of Midtown's lights. I may or may not have thrown a tantrum when my parents closed the curtains at bedtime, and I suggest you do the same if you want to keep watch all night as I did after they reopened them.

Though pampered at home, Kona clearly did not want to leave the Executive Hotel Le Soleil New York after her "Konacation." NIKKI M. MASCALI

Report: Hundreds of NYCHA playgrounds not safely maintained

An audit by Comptroller Scott Stringer found most kids' recreation areas in public housing developments had broken, jagged equipment that could harm children.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The New York City Housing Authority has failed to maintain hundreds of playgrounds in public housing developments across the city, Comptroller Scott M. Stringer said, putting thousands of children at risk.

Stringer's office released an audit on Wednesday that found the New York City Housing Authority (NYCHA) did not properly maintain 549 — nearly 70 percent — of its 788 playgrounds.

Those playgrounds, according to the audit, had conditions including missing and broken equipment, some with "exposed, jagged edges," loose or otherwise damaged safety surfaces like mats and tiles and broken or deteriorated benches.

"Jagged exposed metal that could wound a toddler, sharp edges on slides that could slash a child and surfaces that could potentially send our youngest New Yorkers to the hospital emergency room," Stringer said at a press conference. "The conditions are decrepit."

These conditions, Stringer said, came to be in part because of NYCHA's inspection process.

For 25 developments where hazardous conditions were found, the comptroller's office looked into NYCHA's monthly inspection reports over a 17-month period. Twenty-four of those developments failed to report any hazardous playground conditions.

Many NYCHA playgrounds had broken play equipment with sharp, exposed edges, according to the audit. OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER

That is in contrast, Stringer said, with the "clearly visible hazards" photographed by auditors.

Nine developments filed more than a dozen "inaccurate" inspection reports within two months of the audit, according to Stringer, meaning they omitted hazards that the auditors themselves specifically identified. Twelve developments filed no inspection reports at all.

The 25 developments investigated in total filed 124, or 29 percent, of the 425 monthly inspection reports required in that time period.

"Just when we should be helping our kids achieve their dreams, NYCHA is making play spaces a nightmare," Stringer said. "So today, not just as comptroller, but as a father of two little boys who use playgrounds, I'm not asking, I'm demanding NYCHA inspect every single one of its playgrounds to determine their safety."

"Not next week, not next month. We are not having 'lead paint two,'" Stringer added, referring to last fall when it came to light that NYCHA failed to conduct required annual lead inspections.

In a statement, NYCHA said that it is committed to "providing safe, clean and connected communities" for everyone in public housing.

"We had an external auditor review all of our playgrounds and are already taking steps to correct hazardous conditions within 90 days," the statement added.

What if, instead of causing cancer, cell phone radiation actually helps you live longer? ISTOCK

Is cellphone radiation good for people?

A study of cellphone radiation on rats had the exact opposite results you'd expect.

letters@metro.us

Since we're already living in Bizarro World, consider this: What if decades of rumors about cell phone radiation were totally wrong? What if, instead of causing cancer, it actually helps you live longer?

That's what a writer for Mother Jones said newly released animal research appears to show.

Kevin Drum examined the National Toxicology Program's final draft report, a study of the effect of cellphone radiation on rats. What he found was just about the opposite of the worst-case scenario about radiation and cancer. Rats with no exposure to radiation died younger, and radiation exposure appeared to prevent the most common fatal disease in the species.

The specifics of the cellphone radiation study

"The study found that a very small number of male rats exposed to radiation developed malignant gliomas, though oddly, there was no dose-response effect: rats exposed to low levels of radiation developed gliomas at the same rate as those exposed to high levels," Drum wrote. "In any case, the overall effect was not statistically significant. Female rats showed no ill effects at all. The same was true for schwannoma tumors (which are often benign): male rats showed a small increase while female rats didn't."

The study said there was "some evidence" of cancer-causing activity based on those schwannomas, but it was low and confined to males.

Drum also pointed out this finding in the report: "In males, survival was greater in all exposed groups compared to sham controls, though it was statistically significant only in the 1.5 and 3 W/kg groups. Survival in the sham control group was 28 percent compared to 48 percent, 62 percent and 48 percent in the 1.5, 3, and 6 W/kg groups, respectively."

In other words, the rats that weren't exposed to radiation lived less than half as long as rats exposed to the medium dose of radiation. And rats exposed to the most radiation still lived longer.

The authors said the control group largely died of kidney disease, which is common in the strain of rat used for such studies. But the groups exposed to radiation had less occurrence of the disease — and the higher the radiation dose, the less disease there was. The study's authors said the radiation may have reduced inflammation that tends to cause the illness.

The peer review of the study was held last week, Drum said. The review panels voted to accept the report's conclusions. But there was no discussion of the longevity findings. "I'm not sure what we should make of this," he wrote.

Wrestling made John Cena a better actor

The "Blockers" star puts it down to the special bond between the WWE and its audience.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

It's no surprise that John Cena's acting career is on an upward trajectory. First of all, the monstrous success of Dwayne Johnson's cinematic efforts helped pave the way for wrestlers, and we all know how Hollywood likes to copy a winning formula.

Cena is different from Johnson, though. Because off the back of his hilarious scene-stealing turn in "Trainwreck," he's remained in the comedy genre with "Blockers," where he once again more than holds his own.

Like Johnson, Cena has stuck to his strengths, mostly because of the huge respect that he has for the audience. Cena recently told Metro that respect is something that he carried over from his wrestling career, and took the time to touch upon his turn in "Blockers," too,

What originally attracted you to "Blockers"?
Well, the story was damn good. It was subject matter that stands the test of time. It's about young women becoming adults, and their parents' inability to understand that.

Do you get nervous about doing comedy?
I'm excited by it. When you walk into the film and know there are intensely funny people in the comedy, you feel relaxed. If I was the only one in it we've got some trouble with!

Did you try and get to know your co-stars beforehand?
Each of us had some time to bond. It was limited, but for the best. The movie's about parents becoming friends because their kids are friends. And the current situation in the movie is that their friendship has almost dissipated. And that played in our favor, in a way. Even though [my character] is trying his best as a dad, he's very distant in what's going on with his actual daughter.

With "Trainwreck" and now this, it feels as though female comedic voices get the best out of you.
I wouldn't restrict it to gender. I'm just fair and have an open mindedness when I walk in. Sometimes I don't get all the jokes. But being humble enough to ask for it to be explained, and knowing I'm just a small piece, allows me to play it better. Because comedy doesn't have a gender.

What have you brought from your time in WWE to being an actor?
I think the elements of WWE that're most valuable to this is the ability to tell stories. And knowing your piece in the whole story. WWE is a very humbling experience. Because the world doesn't revolve around you. The world revolves around the entity and the audience. And you're merely a small piece in the entire entity. A lot of times you might be a very showcased piece, or you can be a minimal piece. But even if you're a minimal piece and you do something memorable it can make memories that last a lifetime.

When it comes to WWE, were you originally attracted to the entertainment or physical side?
Much more the entertainment. Then when you learn your craft you want to be as physically capable as you can be. Trust me — I feel so at home with the WWE because it's a place where you can entertain and show physical prowess at the same time, and be enthusiastic, too. It's definitely the entertainment side that drew me, and has kept me so passionate over the years.

Wrestlers have such a special relationship with their audience — one that's more respectful than actors.
The benefit of live performance, and consistent live performances, being in front of the audience every night, means you aren't sequestered. I usually watch my movies alone or in a screening with my peers. Imagine performing the movie in front of an arena? You'll know what works and what doesn't. Also, imagine turning up for a movie where they say, 'OK, you will be paid nothing. And you will wager yourself on the success of the movie.' At that point you'd become a little bit more invested in the movie's success. And that's kind of how we operate it. It's a weird, family-type grass roots cultural relationship between a WWE performer and a WWE fan. I think it's like nothing else ever. It's prepared me for whole lot, not just in entertainment, but in being a grown man. I never forget that without them, I don't exist. Without the ticket buyer, the moviegoer, I'm not talking to you about "Blockers." I'm doing ... God knows what!

"Blockers" is released April 6.

Mikkeller Brewing NYC
Citi Field is already New York City's best food hall, and now it's added a brewery to the roster. Tucked beneath right field and accessible without a ticket, Mikkeller Brewing NYC is the new Queens home base of one of the world's best-loved breweries and the ultimate sports bar for Mets fans. Pull up one of the many seats in the 10,000-square-foot taproom and spend innings sipping through the 60 craft beers on tap (yes, there are baseball-themed brews) alongside an eclectic food lineup of ballpark favorites and Danish nosh by chef Claus Meyer. Citi Field, between the Bullpen and Right Field gates on 126th Street, mikkellernyc.com

Radegast Hall & Biergarten
Williamsburg's Radegast Hall & Biergarten has the hallmarks of an authentic biergarten, with all the right mostly German but also Czech, Italian and British beers flowing. But what makes it a family-friendly favorite of the neighborhood is its large, sunny dining room, where you'll find live music nearly every night, and the giant outdoor grill turning out delicious brats and sausages for the climate-controlled back patio. 113 N. Coney Island Brewery
When you open a brewery next to Brooklyn's amusement park by the sea, you'd better bring the fun. Coney Island Brewery has definitely carved out its own beer identity with fun flavors like the Cotton Candy Kölsch served on its large shaded front patio. They even have their own "ride" — a free tour of the brewery. 1904 Surf Ave., Brooklyn, coney islandbeer.com

Clinton Hall at the Seaport District
South Street Seaport is the city's oldest berth, with roads still paved with cobblestones and the architecture of a seaside town. A growing number of entertainment options are giving it new life as one of New York City's most exciting destinations. At the heart of it is Clinton Hall, a two-story beer hall with 20 rotating taps of whatever they're excited about at the time, with a few surprises like cask-conditioned ales, a menu of 20 burgers, plus tons of bar games and the viral WTF Waffles for dessert. 19 Fulton St., Seaport District, clintonhallny.com

Bierstrasse Harlem Beer Garden
Hudson River views while you sip Eastern European pilsners is what you'll find at Bierstrasse Harlem. This piece of Germany next to the 12th Avenue viaduct will serve you a pretzel the size of your head and a sausage platter, but also mixes in a few New York favorites like chicken & biscuits with gravy and beer-infused mac 'n' cheese. Cozy up in the rustic dining room or bring a friend on a sunny day to enjoy the outdoor tables surrounded by greenery. 7303, 697 W. 133rd St., bierstrassenyc.com

A star-studded Masters on tap for this weekend

The Masters are underway at Augusta with Tiger Woods as the headliner.

EVAN MACY
evan.macy@metro.us

Tiger Woods was plus-1 on Day 1 at the Masters. GETTY IMAGES

The 2018 Masters has some juice to it.

Most notably because it seems to be shaping up as a battle between the 40-something monsters of the game (Tiger Woods and Phil Mickelson), the 30-something veterans (Bubba Watson, Dustin Johnson) and the young guns (Jordan Spieth, Rory McIlroy and others).

The generational divides have coalesced to bring something for everyone at Augusta National this week and it could make for one of the most viewed and anticipated Masters in years.

Of course, this all begins and ends with Woods.

The 42-year-old will play in his first Masters since 2015 and is preparing hard. Before a jovial practice round with Mickelson Tuesday, Woods reportedly practiced at Augusta twice last month. His game is reinvigorated, as he seems to be firing on all cylinders after impressive showings at the Valspar Championship and Arnold Palmer Invitational in March. He has become a betting favorite in Las Vegas.

"He's got a great chance," said McIlroy — a golfer missing only the Masters from his grand slam resume. "Look at how he's played the last few weeks. He's had four wins here. He's very comfortable around this golf course, and his game is right there. Any time Tiger Woods is healthy and in this sort of form, he's dangerous at any golf tournament. But given his history here, I think even more so."

Mickelson, too, is playing well. He's routinely finished in the Top 10 this year with a win in Mexico and second at Pebble Beach. This duo will command massive galleries this weekend.

As will the younger guys. Sergio Garcia is seeking to defend his title while Spieth is still chasing the green jacket he let slip away a few years ago. McIlroy has won this season — in dominating fashion as have Watson, Justin Thomas, Jason Day and Justin Rose.

It's an impressive ledger of winners to be sure. If any of them can "upset" Tiger and capture a second win on the year it will be an understandably tough task.

The early returns

Tiger Woods did not have a great first day at the Masters Thursday as he finished plus-1. Woods struggled early on the back nine but birdies on Nos. 14 and 16 salvaged his day.

"I played the par-5s very sloppily today," Woods said. "That was the difference in the round."

Woods will tee off at 1:27 p.m. on Friday.

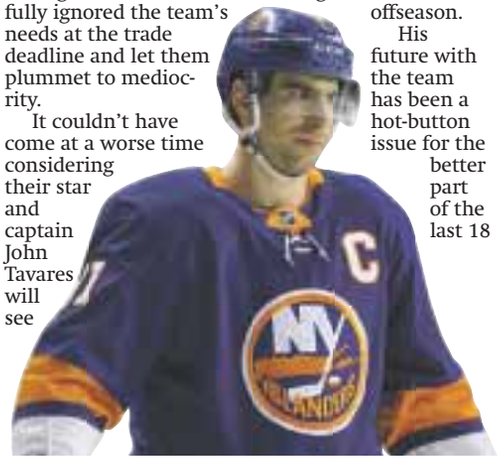
Woods had a spectacular first day when compared to defending Masters champ Sergio Garcia, however. Garcia hit five balls in the water at the par-5 15th hole and made a 13, tying the highest score ever on any hole at the tournament.

Isles' Tavares 'looking forward to the future'

All the New York Islanders have to look forward to now is the sweet release that is the end of the regular season, though there will be a summer of nerves ahead of them.

Once slated to make a serious charge toward postseason contention in 2017-18, the Islanders ran out of gas in the season's final stretch as they went from Eastern Conference Wild Card holders to dead last in the Metropolitan Division with just one game left to play after their regular-season home finale against the Rangers Thursday night.

In an all-too-familiar sight, the Islanders seem dysfunctional yet again thanks to management that willfully ignored the team's needs at the trade deadline and let them plummet to mediocrity.



It couldn't have come at a worse time considering their star and captain John Tavares will see his contract expire at the end of the year, making him the biggest free agent available this offseason.

His future with the team has been a hot-button issue for the better part of the last 18 months, though neither Tavares nor the organization has disclosed much about negotiations or lack thereof.

It hasn't stopped Tavares from performing at a high level. Prior to Thursday's tilt against the Rangers, which could have very well been his final home game as an Islander, he recorded 36 goals and 47 assists. It was only two goals away from tying a career high set in 2014-15 and just three helpers from drawing even with his best from 2011-12.

With 83 points, it is just the third time in his career that he eclipsed the 80-point plateau, the first time in three years.

But Tavares has some surprising company in the 80-plus point club this season in the form of rookie Mathew Barzal, who is the frontrunner for the NHL's Calder Trophy as league Rookie of the Year.

Tavares was quick to point out the kind of talent Barzal has become.

"His game keeps getting better and he's just scratching the surface," Tavares said via Newsday's Andrew Gross. "There's a lot of excitement in our group for him. Especially a guy with his talent and his drive to be successful. I'm excited to finish the season with him and looking forward to the future."

For fans looking for any shred of a hint of whether Tavares will stay or not, the last part of that quote is somewhat promising. Though, he could be speaking of a future where they would only be playing together on the Canadian national team.

Regardless, Tavares continues to say the right things about an organization that has been so wrong so often over the past three decades. JOE PANTORNO

Switch to RT could fix Giants' Flowers

With Nate Solder now on board, the Giants can move Flowers.

KRISTIAN DYER
sports@metro.us

Tackle Ereck Flowers showed decent improvement for the Giants last season. GETTY IMAGES

Ereck Flowers won't get a chance to tape over his first three years in the NFL. Instead, the New York Giants offensive tackle is going to get a chance to erase it.

Much has been written about Flowers, the Giants first-round pick three years ago who has struggled to live up to a moderate level of success, let alone the hype of being a top-10 pick in the NFL Draft. Yet with a new head coach in Pat Shurmur and the addition of Nate Solder as the team's starting left tackle, Flowers is going to get a shot to chance his reputation.

Instead under new offensive line coach Hal Hunter, there will be the opportunity to change the narrative entirely.

"Until you actually get your hands on somebody and work with them ... nobody is a real blank slate. He's had a high school coach, he's had a college coach, I believe he's had two coaches here since he's been here at the Giants. So, everybody has different ways, so sometimes you have to erase the tape," Hunter said. "Sometimes you can't just re-record over it. So, it'll take some time to get him doing some things that we want him to do then, but I know both his offensive line coaches that he's had in the past. I've known them for a long time and they were very experienced, very highly thought-of coaches in this league. And I know things that they teach are fundamentally sound."

Hunter spoke at the Giants team facility on a day when the team made a number of the new hires on Shurmur's coaching staff available to the media.

In all likelihood, Flowers will move from left tackle to right tackle, a move that in theory should take some pressure off of him. As a rookie in 2015, he was shifted from the right side to the blindside when injuries necessitated the move.

Flowers struggled his first two years in the league although he showed improvement last year in both pass protection and his run blocking. Perhaps another step forward is possible under Hunter, a longtime offensive line coach who said he's talked with the young tackle several times on the phone already this offseason.

"Yeah, the left side or the right side, I don't think the assignments are that tough. It might not be quite as hard, but it would be like — I golf right-handed — if all of a sudden I have to golf left-handed. It's going to be awhile. He's been playing left tackle for a long time," Hunter said.

"He's been playing it in college and I remember we had a pre-draft visit with him, I met him at the Combine a few years ago. Good, solid left tackle. So, the footwork is going to be different. Everything is going to be just the opposite and he's a good enough athlete that he's going to be able to adjust to all of that, but it's like anything. You're writing and all of a sudden you guys all have to write left-handed. You can do it, but it takes some time to adjust. So, there has to be patience on the learning curve. Like again, the better the athlete, the easier the transition and he is a good athlete."

Aries Trust only yourself when it comes to negotiations and dealing with private matters. Refuse to let anyone limit your ability to control what's important to you.

Taurus Taking a short trip, getting involved in a joint venture with someone unique is favored. Taking care of an elder's personal affairs will be enlightening.

Gemini If someone wants something from you, check his or her motives before you agree. Try not to get sucked into someone else's dilemma or a manipulative plea for help.

Cancer Look for alternative solutions when dealing with argumentative people. Refuse to let an outsider interfere in your personal affairs. A creative outlet will help relieve stress.

Leo When it comes to investments, balance will be necessary. Easy come, easy go can be expected if you aren't diligent about saving and financial prudence.

Virgo Check out possibilities and discuss plans with someone heading in a similar direction as you. An unusual combination of people skills will help you turn a dream into a reality.

Libra Changes at home may be difficult to adjust to at first, but as time passes you will see beneficial results. Do what's best for you and do things that will benefit your happiness.

Scorpio Offering to help a former coworker will lead to a new beginning and a chance to pick up where you left off. Favors will be granted.

Sagittarius Learn from your mistakes. People don't change, so don't give someone who has let you down a second chance to do so again. Concentrate on yourself and your health.

Capricorn A chance to make a financial gain is apparent, but it should be devoid of risk. Deal with experts to ensure that you are following all the rules and regulations.

Aquarius Emotional tactics will be used to coerce you into donating money to or helping someone who is capable but lazy. Listen carefully and question what's being asked of you.

Pisces It's OK to do things differently; that's what distinguishes you from others. Put your energy into something that could lead to long-term rewards. EUGENIA LAST
